Introduction

In recent decades, universities and businesses have been increasingly encouraged to strengthen their cooperation. Initially, the focus was on ensuring that higher education could equip growing numbers of students with the competencies needed for employability. With the rise of the knowledge economy, attention has shifted toward the rapid creation, circulation, and application of knowledge, which now takes place not only at universities but also in R&D units across industry and services.

Despite these developments, universities must continue to provide strong foundational knowledge, foster creativity, and cultivate critical and humanistic thinking.

The purpose of the conference is to explore how universities in the Western Balkans address the challenges of university–business cooperation, to promote mutual learning, and to present good practices from the region and Western Europe. The conference will also highlight how such cooperation fits within broader innovation ecosystems and identify the services needed to support it.

Participants will include rectors and vice-rectors of the Rectors' Forum member universities and representatives of selected EUTOPIA universities.
